Editor's Remarks

Written by Aoran

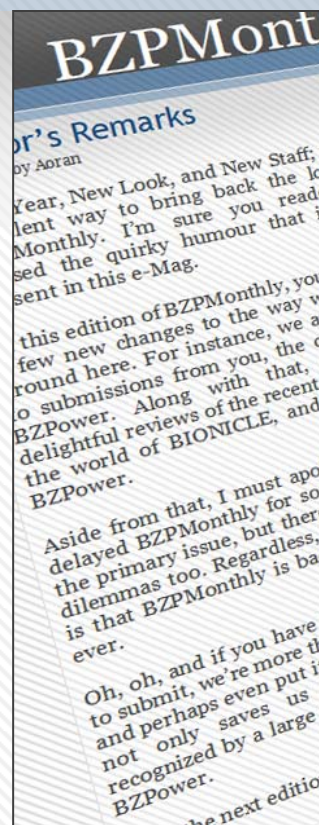

New Year, New Look, and New Staff; truly an excellent way to bring back the long-dead BZPMonthly. I'm sure you readers have missed the quirky humour that is ever-so lacking in this e-Mag.

In this edition of BZPMonthly, you can expect a few new changes to the way we do things around here. For instance, we are now open to submissions from you, the community of BZPower. Along with that, expect some delightful reviews of the recent happenings in the world of BIONICLE, and the Forum of BZPower.

Aside from that, I must apologise for having delayed BZPMonthly for so long. School was the primary issue, but there were some other dilemmas too. Regardless, what matters now is that BZPMonthly is back, and better than ever.

Oh, oh, and if you have any ideas, or content to submit, we're more than happy to accept it, and perhaps even put it in the next edition. It not only saves us work, but you'll be recognized by a large amount of members on BZPower.

Until the next edition, peace out!

BZP 2.0?

Written by Aoran

As anyone that's been on BZPower since 2003, and a Guest since 2001, you would have seen a lot of change amongst itself. We've had staff join, staff leave, and countless contests and competitions. There is one thing, however, that hasn't changed in the last seven years: The layout.

Ok, there are many members that enjoy the two current available skins, but what about the members that want something new? Well, hope of a new skin or two could very well be on the way.

BZPower, as I'm sure some of you already know, is home to some very talented designers. If, perhaps, the BZPower Staff were to embrace these skilled designers' talents, and work together in a collaboration, who knows what would be pulled off?

Of course, there is the difficulty of finding these designers. There's the necessity of being able to code in HTML/CSS/xHTML, having powerful graphics software, and having an eye in popular web design.

However, it will be worth the effort. With a variety in skins, there will be a little more something for everyone.

Epic Tales of Epic Proportions

Written by Phyooorii

We're in for some more excitement this time around! An unlikely team; a scary, parallel universe; and reflections of a mad scientist. Possibly suicidal missions, a Toa of Light drained of some of his light, and revelations of things we weren't really expecting had any interesting back stories.

Federation of Fear, with the unexpected team of Brutaka, Roodaka, Vezon, Spiriah, Carapar and Takadox are preparing to head to the southern chain of islands to find the former leader of the Brotherhood of Makuta. This Serial will act like Dreams of Destruction, as a very story driven serial.

The Mutran Chronicles, like the Gali Nuva Blog, will act like a diary. It reveals the Brotherhood's past, and shows us some really interesting things about the (arguably) less important details of the BIONICLE saga.

Dark Mirror. Takanuva, half shadow and half light, transported to a universe where Toa are tyrants and the Brotherhood and Dark Hunters are the freedom fighters. More action packed than Into the Darkness.

Seriously, this looks like an action-packed year.

Splat! Ow, Gravity Hurts!

Written by Aoran

Once more, LEGO delivers, and nothing short of our expectations. The song Gravity Hurts is by Edsim and Maltha, the same band that did Face Me for LEGO last year. Along with that, it too has been used in the making of a music video and the instrumental side having been used in a television advertisement.

The music video starts off with the silhouetted shadows of the band walking in a corridor, with clips of the 2001 advertisements crossing over. Gradually, as the song progresses, the video clips go through the years, with glimpses of the band playing, and a Vorahk rocking it out on his staff.

As it approaches the end, however, it gets into an amazing solo, with real 'action' clips that move in tune to the music. Again, it's nothing short than what we would normally expect from LEGO.

As a fan of BIONICLE ever since it first began, I'd have to say that this is a piece of music that really suits 2008, along with the final battle we can expect later this year.

Oh, and don't forget to put this on your Zune.

Ancient Mirrors Sneak-Peek

Written by Tesseract

The next morning, the team woke to find Saekra preparing a meal over another small fire. They ate quietly – none of them wanted to admit that their food was “slightly well done.” After all, Saekra seemed quite satisfied.

Tesseract didn't want the group to move out too far just yet, but he wouldn't talk about his reasons for this decision. Odd as this was, the others trusted him – if anyone knew when the opportune moment would come for action, Tesseract was the one. The three Toa wandered around the outskirts of the clearing, sharing old memories. Arkana took some of this time to observe the natural Rahi wildlife in the area, as well.

Tesseract's heavily-armored form sat in the large tree at the center of the clearing, apparently waiting for some specific moment, though the others did not have any idea what this might be. Moutekea, Kalile, and Saekra sat below, on one of Kelox's stone formations from the night before.

Fancy reading the rest of this incredible story, along with checking out the newly posted chapters, short stories, or even checking out the MOCS, drop down to Tesseract's Blog.
