What the heck do y'all want actually????

Hey.

So I dunno who saw it but I finally bit the bullet and and put the Jake English Adventure fangame on indefinite hiatus. This is because I have:

- a soul-destroying full time job I'm trying to get out of and to something new
- a novel that is actively and rapidly being written right now its awesome
- other stories I try to update twice a month
- a fangame I am deeply passionate about but lack the time to do

The full time job is not negotiable Because Capitalism. And the novel is also not negotiable Because Capitalism.

But. We do have the other two branches.

I'm thinking about it and if I put all of my current stories on hiatus and focused on the fangame and was able to build a team that would work, then... yeah. In about 3 to 6 months, we would have episode two.

WHICH IS TEMPTING because I keep saying this, but the actual roadmap for JEA is the best story I'm ever gonna write in any fandom. It just is.

But you gotta weight that with the question of "when this part of the project is complete, how much audience will be there?"

All that said, all the prologue to ask:

☐ I prefer a consistent story update schedule, I am here for the writing.

☐ I'd like the fangame to happen, and would be content with patrons getting previews, but not finished product for a few months.

Option C: I have no preference and am just here to support the artist, regardless of what kind of/how much content they produce [thumbs up emoji]

I ALSO HAVE NO PREFERENCE :D But I very much do want to see you be able to write the story you want to write! And also help you make it.

I signed up to be a patron to support YOU, regardless of what project(s) you're working on. If the fangame is where your heart is then that's what I want to support you in doing. This is not a transactional or conditional thing - I'm here to support your work to the best of my ability, whatever that work ends up looking like.

This is why I would like that patreon allowed multiple choice polls, no-votes still make the numbers look small ^^"
I myself am supporting the person, not as much the projects so whatever happens, I'll stick around but I voted for the one I'd love the most. Ty for your hard work so far Arc.

jokes on you patreon does allow that and i purposefully did not give y'all the option so i could get a definitive answer on this

I voted for the game, because it does sound like it's one you are burning to do! I follow and support you for who you are and because I know you can do amazing stuff, no matter the form or the frequency.
I also wanna add that I would not be mad/disappointed if you wound up going for the regular fic updates, I know building a brand/maintaining output is an important aspect of being (or even just feeling) like you are being productive and active, and if the main poll results showed that that's what most people want, then I'll support you in that too!
In the same way, if you wind up working full-throttle into the game, and the work slows down for whatever reason (health stuff, work stuff, other stuff that might put you behind your own schedule), I would still support you.
I enjoy the updates, and I love reading/playing/seeing whatever it is you work on at any point in time, but like, I wanna be clear that I'm not in this for a sort of set number of fan works per month? I wanna support you, and create an environment where you can keep doing your thing, cause this is 2018, and treating the creative people you like as if you're a factory owner and they're a content-producing machine is SO XXth century :P
