Recharging the batteries with cyborgs and robobs

Kinktober was a mixed success. Well, okay, to me, it was just a success because the sheer quantity that Mims and I managed to write was incredible. If I'd elected to stop writing full mini-AUs and just wrote the kinks, we'd have finished all 31, I'm certain. But... I love AUs? What's the fun in anything if you can't have an AU?

Anyway. I consider it a success, but it also... severely burned me out on writing. And I could be a mopey child and cry about my write being broken, or I could just Pivot To Video for a while.

I used to do streams all the time, back when I had the internet to do it. I absolutely adored it, it was so fun and I'm not a bad gamer at all. But with my internet connection, that's no longer possible.

But... I can still record video. Easy-peasy.

Tales From The Borderlands is one of my favorite stories in gaming. I love it desperately, and it recently turned four years old. Thus, I've been doing a replay of the entire thing. I've finished Episode One and Two, and they are viewable on the playlist here.

Part One of Episode Three will likely go up tonight, and it'll come with a fun opening sequence. I had to relearn how video editing works to make it happen, but I'm extremely pleased with how it came out.

Hope you'll check it out! If you've never seen/played TFTBL before, I'm keeping the spoilers to an absolute minimum, so you can follow along the story beat and experience it for the first time.

Anyway, that's what's going on with me. How're all y'all?
