

If players choose to call Dean Carlysle, they experience the following.

The connection is shaky at best, with feedback. On the other side of the line, you hear scared whimpering and pleading.

Don't come to the door. Don't open the door. They're on the other side of the door.

I found a new door. It worked. I thought it worked. Why are they back. Why didn't it work.

If players choose not to call Dean Carlysle, but do choose to go to his flat, describe the following:

The door to Dean Carlysle's flat is blue, with a silver doorknob. There is a matching silver plate beneath the peephole that reads 23. The mail slot is labeled with his name, and is in the same silver, with flowers embossed on the outside.

The door matches the drawings found in Emile Harris's apartment.
