

St. John Terrell strikes an imposing figure as he and 17 other revolutionaries reenacted George Washington's historic crossing of the Delaware River yesterday afternoon.

Reenactment At Washington Crossing

Rain-Soaked Colonials Rout Hessians

By Bob Carmignani
Times Advertiser Staff Writer

St. John Terrell, that once a year George Washington, has crossed the Delaware River and surprised the Hessians reveling at Trenton.

The main difference between Terrell's latest coup and the one pulled off by this nation's first President in 1776 was the weather.

Washington negotiated the swollen Delaware River amid falling snow and sub-freezing temperatures.

Terrell yesterday crossed the drought-plagued river in a slight drizzle with the temperature hovering around the 50-degree mark.

Terrell is the owner and operator of the Lambertville Music Circus.

Several hundred people lined both shores of the Delaware to witness Terrell's 13th reenactment of the historic event.

Ironically, a cloudy sky suddenly brightened as Terrell departed Washington's headquarters on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware River for the crossing.

The sky quickly turned charcoal gray as Terrell boarded a new, full-scale Durham boat replica presented by the Trenton Chapter, American Business Clubs, to the Washington Crossing Foundation a few weeks ago. A strange, quietness prevailed along the waterfront as Terrell and his small task force, all attired in Revolutionary War garb, crossed the Delaware River.

Prior to the crossing, a color guard from Fort Dix performed a retreat ceremony.

This year's Delaware River crossing marked the 189th anniversary of the event, a testimonial to the perseverance and courage of our freedom loving ancestors.

A recorded narration and background music accompanied the event.

Star Atop Tower

The Washington Crossing Commission this year emphasized the traditional Christmas star atop the hill tower at Washington State Park.

Visible for miles, the star not only proclaims the Christmas season, but also the valiant crossing of Washington and his revolutionaries.

The star symbolizes the words on a plaque within the tower which reads: "May liberty's beacon inspire patriotism, peace and fellowship amongst all peoples."

The crossing this year had a two-fold purpose — a tribute to Washington's fight for freedom and a tribute to the American boys now fighting in Viet Nam to maintain it.

Nugent is a Roman Catholic and Luci became a convert to the faith last July 2 on her birthday. They will be married in the late summer, possibly at the white house.

It was a warm, pleasant day with bright sunshine and blue skies for the President's traditional Texas Christmas. The good spirits of the family and their obvious joy for Luci was reflected in their gay greetings of "Merry Christmas."

Blackhaired, blue-eyed Luci and her betrothed, who is from Waukegan, Ill. stayed back at the ranch while the others attended Episcopal services.

Called Nugent's Parents
Friday night the young couple put in a jubilant long distance call to Nugent's parents after the President gave his consent for Nugent to present Luci with a white gold engagement ring with a center diamond and two baguette diamonds.

It was learned that the number of Communist-instigated incidents during the cease-fire had been deliberately played down because of the American desire to make the truce work.

A statement by the top information officer at U.S. military headquarters here said: "The Viet Cong resumed hostilities with a vengeance by hitting outposts, district headquarters, sniping and small-arms attacks and continuous harassing actions all over South Viet Nam."

"Starting at 0900 Saturday — 8 a.m. Friday EST — there has been a total of 84 significant Viet Cong-initiated incidents reported. The most significant of these are mortar attacks against four Vietnamese army positions in Long An Province just south of Saigon.

"At 0130 hours the six district towns of the province, including the province capital of Tan An, were simultaneously attacked by enemy fire. There were two outposts in the province overrun and at last observation, reports indicated buildings were burning at both locations. Results are presently unknown.

Saturday this storm carried its severe icing, high winds and snow into Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, where the Weather Bureau pored hazardous driving warnings for motorists. By Sunday, it appeared that the storm would bring its somewhat depleted strength to bear on the nation's most heavily populated region along the north Atlantic coastal plain.

With millions of cars on the move, the national fatality toll appeared trending close to a record annual high mark of 49,000 for this year.

The Christmas weekend attrition included a bus accident fatal to 12 persons almost at the outset of the tally period. A Greyhound bus went out of control on icy pavement between Grants Pass and Medford, Ore., and overturned.

County College Trustees Chosen

Freeholders January 15, 1964. Dr. Dodds became chairman of the study group in July 1965.

To the Board of Trustees now falls the responsibility of establishing a timetable for fashioning a living college. The trustees will select a college president, the college site and decide what the admission requirements shall be.

The distinguished and independent board will have the authority and power to follow through on the dream that spurred on the more than 200 worked to bring about a citizens of Mercer County who worked to bring about a majority of more than 2 to 1 in the November 2 referendum.

Dr. Dodds has called for a school "free of all considerations except those of creating the high quality community college demanded by the voters, which will be ranked as the best in New Jersey."

Should Mercer County citizens seek to evaluate their college movement and use speed as a criterion, they will find they could theoretically "be in business tomorrow" because of the nucleus already present in the form of the Trenton Junior College with its 850 full-time students, 400 industrial arts students and 50 part-time and night students.

Just by taking over Trenton Junior College and changing its name, the Community College could have half of its enrollment filled and a teaching staff to go along.

Four sites have been proposed for the new college—Assumpink Park in West Windsor Township, nine acres in downtown Trenton opposite city hall, 116 state-owned acres along Stuyvesant Avenue and 16 acres of air rights over the Pennsylvania Railroad's Clinton Street Station.

The immediate step for the Board of Trustees is to evaluate its financial needs and submit a report in time for the county budget in mid-March.

Bond Issue Ahead
The college will accommodate 1,500 full-time and 3,000 part-time students. It has been viewed as the county's largest spending project. There lies ahead the question on how much federal monies Mercer can get.

The Department of Education has estimated that the county will have to float a $3.5 million bond issue to uphold its share of capital construction costs. Freeholder Coffee has assured that the state's share of funds will be ready when needed. The state has proposed that state and county share capital construction costs on a 50-50 basis.

However, the financial proposals may vary, the goal at least is very clear—to provide a means of education for Mercer County students who are eager to continue on to college and who can't stand the expense of living out of the state, where they often encounter tuition penalties because of overcrowded conditions.

Brief biographies of the newly-named trustees are as follows:

Tradition Under Fire
ALLAHABAD, India (AP) — The Uttar Pradesh State Bar Council has urged abandonment of another tradition of British origin: addressing judges as "Your Worship" or "Your Honor." In a petition to the Bar Council of India it contends "Mr. Judge" would be more in keeping with the national spirit.
