Thousands lined the Delaware River shore front here this afternoon to witness the passing of the greatest air fleet ever sent aloft. Between the lower bridge and the Calhoun Street bridge a perfect swarm of humanity watched the spectacle. In the city proper, hundreds clustered about on office building and house tops and on the streets and craned their necks for a view of the great aerial parade.

There were cheers as the van of the armada roared up the river. The first squadron, huge bombers, swept low with their motors wide open. A tremor in the air currents was felt on the ground as squadron after squadron of the ships of the air cut the horizons and zoomed swiftly by. The spacious lawn of Stacy Park was the best vantage point for a full view of the spectacle and the crowds.

It was part of the greatest assemblage of air-fighters that America has ever witnessed. Thousands sought every place of vantage to observe the colorful and dramatic episode written against the sky by Uncle Sam's war birds.

From the tops of buildings, from street corners, from windows, the citizenty dropped their occupations for a brief time and gave their undivided attention to the birdmen.

At 1:47 p. m., the first squadron of bombers were sighted coming rapidly up the Delaware. They looked not unlike sea gulls. A row of black dots tapering down into nothing, represented the coming of another section of the air armada.

In the air the speed was hard to measure. It seemed that they were only drifting. But below, on the ground, their shadows raced along. At the head of the column rode a tiny pilot plane. Unconcerned and street corners, from windows, the
