State Defense Radio Hookup Is Developed

NEWARK - AP - A communications system for use in event of State-wide emergency is being developed as quickly as possible, the State Civil Defense Office announced last night. Leonard Dreyfuss, State civil defense director, said the communications committee of the organization contemplates the use of telephone, commercial radio, short wave and amateur broadcasts. Dreyfuss said that under the plan, "the entire State will be criss-crossed with several methods of almost instant communication, so that if one system fails for any reason, another system will be ready, or they can all be worked simultaneously." The State Police short wave radio now has a State-wide communication system which can be tied in with virtually every police department in New Jersey. The announcement said the New Jersey Broadcasters' Association has submitted a detailed plan of communications, using the 22 commercial radio stations of the State, which can be tied into a single State-wide network through three key stations. The stations are at Trenton, Newark and Bridgeton. Under the plan, the three key stations could connect with facilities of the State Police system.

Tells Perils Of Greenland Icecap Trip

PARIS - UP - Explorer Paul Emile Victor said yesterday his expedition battled below-zero temperatures and Arctic storms to complete the first mechanized crossing of Greenland's mammoth ice cap. Victor, a captain in the United States Air Corps Reserve, arrived in Paris Friday after three months in the Arctic. In an interview, the gray-haired sun-tanned explorer said the 36 scientists, photographers and explorers of the Greenland expedition had doubled their original program, despite harrowing experiences. "Originally, we planned to cover 3,000 miles, crossing the cap first from west to east, then east to west. Despite bad weather, we covered over 7,000 miles, making seismic soundings and reports all along the way," he said. His blue eyes shone with pleasure as he traced the zig-zag course of the expedition in red crayon on a map. "Excellent Star" "We had an excellent star above us," the 43-year-old explorer said. "At one point on the eastern mountain range we were lost in unknown and uncharted territory for three days, with a maximum visibility of 30 to 40 feet, but we came out with not one scratch. "That's luck, but not only luck. The men are good," he said. With the French expedition were Denmark's glaciologist, Jens Jari, who officially represented the Danish government, and Switzerland's Michel Perez. "I have never seen such a team. They were first class. They worked together beautifully and even after difficult and close living remained friends throughout," he said. Although Victor said it was too early to make any flat statements on actual scientific findings of the expedition, he said the following had been shown: 1. The Greenland ice cap, a territory twice as large as Texas, is still shrinking rapidly. The fact that the cap is melting may eventually lead to large scale droughts over Northern Europe and North America in years to come. 2. From soundings and gravity meter readings, the expedition proved the ice cap, which is shaped like a huge bowl with mountains rimming it, is 1,000 feet thick, and that solid ground at the bottom is roughly at sea level. 3. It is possible for men to live on the center of Greenland, at 10,000-meters altitude, 300-miles inland, despite the almost 90 degree (Fahrenheit) below zero temperatures in winter.

Capital Marks Its Founding With Pageant

WASHINGTON - AP - Into a woodland dell about five minutes' ride up Sixteenth Street from the White House, some 3,000 persons are going each night to see Paul Green's new symphonic drama, "Faith of Our Fathers." The pageant is part of a prolonged celebration marking the 150th anniversary of the founding of the nation's capital city. President Truman and his wife and daughter attended the first performance, last Friday, and later sent this telegram to the director of the sesquicentennial: "All of us enjoyed the show very much. I wish you would tell Paul Green I don't see how he accomplished so much in such a short time." Green won a Pulitzer Prize for his play, "Abraham's Bosom." He is the author of the pageants, "The Lost Colony," now in its 10th year at Roanoke Island, N. C., and "The Common Glory," which is played each year at Williamsburg, Va. Green says that this pageant is intended to "revivify for ourselves in 1950 the faith our forefathers had."

Flower Division

Lois Tindall of the Four Leaf Clover Club won seven excellent awards for her flower exhibits. Barbara Stettes took three awards and Jean Stettes, also of the Silver Lining Club, another. Joan Tindall of Four Leaf Clover, Joan Bottlinger of Rainbow Club and Geraldine Geiger of Lator Lassies had two awards each. Others "excellents" went to Phillip Schreiber, Bernard Lenhardt, Jane Savidge and Claire Austin. Barbara Ege of the Titusville Stitchers won three excellent awards in the food preparation division. Her fellow club members, Priscilla Witzman and Judy Hess, also had excellent awards. Judy Perrine and Delores Jones of the Rosedale Homemakers had two excellent. Veronica Goetze and Jean Hagenbuch of the same club had excellent entries. Claire Austin and Jane Savidge of the Washington Crossing Bee Hive, Barbara Stettes of Silver Lining and Betty Lou Waters of the Hamilton Square Cockerets won excellent ribbons.

Livestock Division

Mary Ann James' entry in the baby beef division was judged "very good," and William James' Aberdeen Angus entry, "good." Both are members of the Beef and Pork Club. Jimmy James received a "very good" for his pen of lambs. The Washington critics generally proclaimed the show impressive, but they gave only tepid approval to its literary qualities and the acting. Some New York critics were more sympathetic, stressing the importance of the message of the play and the beauty of the setting. The amphitheater has just been completed, at a cost of $663,000. The management hopes that the pageant will play there for many years. The present engagement will continue through September 30.
